Not illustrated. 1973 Excerpt: . . . contains mora plagioclase and quartz and less hornblende. The composition of this rock is hornblende quartz diorite. It forms a part of the large mass mapped as metagabbro on the east side of the Granite Basin pluton and the border zones of metagabbro west of Hartman Bar and along Coldwater Creek. Small bodies consisting of similar metadiorite occur with metadacite in the southern part of the area. In several places, metadacite grades into metadiorite, and some of the rock mapped as metadacite is fine-to medium-grained metadiorite. These two rock types seem to be genetically related. Their mineralogy and chemistry are identical, but their textures reflect different rates of cooling. The intrusive relation between the metavolcanic rocks and metamorphosed intrusive rocks (fig. 20) is exposed on the ridge south of Catrell Creek at an elevation of 4, 800 feet (east of loc. 850). Here lens-shaped and dike-like bodies of metadiorite and metagabbro cut the metadacite and metamorphosed sodarhyolite. The metadiorite consists of plagioclase, quartz, lightgreen hornblende, epidote, sphene, and magnetite. It is thus mineralogically similar to the metadacite in this area. The differences between the two are mainly textural. In the metadiorite, plagioclase and hornblende grains are large enough to be recognized with the unaided eye, and the rock seems equigranular. Horn Figure 20. --Lenses and dike-like bodies of raetadiorite (mdi) and metagabbro (mgb) in metadacite (md) and metasodarhyolite (mr). Dark clots of hornblende (ho) also occur.
