Excerpt: . . . are preachers of the earnest, the natural, the apostolic type; men wrapped up in their message; seeking only to do justice to that; striving only how to place that before the hearer in the most striking form. They are transparent mediums, so far that is, as mediums can be transparent. If we linger on their tones, their looks, their phrases, it is by an effort of our own will. Herbert describes them in his Elixir --A man that looks on glass, On it may stay his eye, Or if he pleaseth through it pass, And there the Heaven espy. Mr. Menzies is without comparison, and for many reasons, the greater orator. He adds to the same love of truth, the same abandonment to a task, a keen delight for an impassioned argumentation. He scents the controversy afar off. From the lofty watch-tower of his pulpit he discerns the approach and spread of infidelity, and his note is the clamorous sound of the alarm bell. His is the eager spirit of a Paul, The fiery soul, which working out its way, Fretteth the pigmy body to decay, And oer informs its tenement of clay. Mr. Potters is the patience of a John. The one is the torrent bearing everything before it, the other the stream fertilising a thousand plains. The one sends our thoughts inward, the other raises the eyes to the skies. The one is arrayed for battle against the giant, with the stones...
